

Coronavirus

As we have received several enquiries regarding the possible outbreak of the Coronavirus, we are now releasing the following statement.

Videcom Security took early steps to make sure our staff were ware of the increased risks associated with the Coronavirus, we have distributed additional hygiene products and increased staff awareness at our offices and introduced static hand gel dispensers.

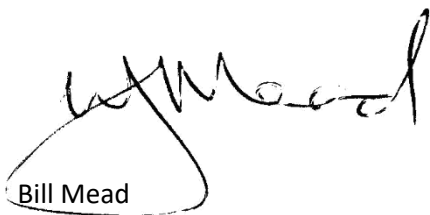

Videcom Security have cloud hosted management systems allowing staff the ability to work from home or remotely from our offices. Many of our clients also have access to these online resources for the reporting and tracking of their service calls.

We are currently being kept informed by best advice from central government as well as maintaining contact with our customers many of which have their own strategy for dealing with any outbreak together with monitoring social media.

As of the 5th March 2020, we continue to carry out our business activities as usual with an increased awareness of the risks of contracting Coronavirus. Should any of our staff feel unwell they have been told to self-isolate from work and make contact to health services via 111 and to keep us informed. We are requesting the same from our customers to keep us informed of any known cases. We will then follow any advice given to us by National Health Service, England.

Should we find ourselves low on labour resources due to increased sickness we will need to prioritise calls accordingly; installations will reduce in order to try to maintain existing systems. Our extensive online service connectivity will enable us to support many systems remotely and individually customers will be kept informed should our service capability deteriorate.

We remain vigilant and continue to monitor central government advice and continue to review the company's response to this ongoing health issue.
